Case studies

- Between January and August, more than 1,400 victims in Singapore lost at least S$20.6 million in total, police said.

- "Building malware is so commonplace that there are publicly available tools, known as open-source software, that scammers can use to automatically build their app."

- "And it could affect Android, Windows or iOS. Anything could be possible with time"

- "In Singapore, the Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS) and the Infocomm Media Development Authority (IMDA) proposed this week a way in which companies and consumers could share losses arising from scams.

    If they are found to have breached their responsibilities, financial institutions and telecommunication companies (telcos) may have to compensate their customers who fall prey to scams."
